THE PROBLEM: Metro Atlanta has a historic shortfall of affordable multifamily housing. Projected population growth and current development trends suggest the problem will only worsen without increased affordable housing development.

As a reflection of Atlanta’s shortage of affordable housing, more than half of Atlanta’s families are house burdened, spending 30% or more of their income on housing. Making matters worse, the City is losing 1,500 units of affordable housing each year. Current statistics indicate a current shortfall of 300,000 low-income rental units and a need for at least 100,000 new affordable units over the next decade.

WHY IT MATTERS: When low-income families have little access to safe, affordable housing permanently a host of social ills follow - evictions, sporadic homelessness, adverse health outcomes, educational disruption for children, financial stress, and more.

Housing is foundational for families. In the absence of affordable housing options, these disruptions in the family can easily become generational, perpetuating a sense of turmoil for the household and the community. Families seeking affordable rental options are struggling as the average rental rate for an apartment in Atlanta is more than $1,700, while wages are largely stagnant.

SOLUTIONS: ANDP has increased its focus on multifamily development by partnering with experienced developers that share a passion for equitable, quality, affordable housing.

Currently, ANDP has partial or full ownership in six multifamily apartment complexes in Atlanta, East Point, Fairburn, and Buford totaling 690 affordable units. The most recently completed development, Creekside at Adamsville Place, contains the first 147 of 1,250 new, affordable apartments to be developed through the Closing the Gap campaign, ANDP’s ambitious effort to build or preserve 2,000 affordable housing units by 2025.

ANDP will utilize four current parcels of land and purchase an additional five or six parcels to meet its goal of 1,250 new affordable apartments. Three of these parcels, featuring 300 units, are currently under construction or in pre-development. And a fourth parcel is in the early planning stages.

ANDP aims to purchase land in areas at the highest risk for displacement—neighborhoods near public transportation, high-performing schools, and other desirable amenities.

Beyond the development of safe and multifamily homes, ANDP connects residents of its apartment complexes to local nonprofit partners and government entities that offer social services and programs to improve residents’ quality of life. ANDP plans to replicate these offerings at new sites.
OUR IMPACT With an increased focus on developing affordable multifamily units, ANDP will nearly triple its number of affordable apartments. ANDP's multifamily development has been recognized with multiple awards.

WHY ‘AFFORDABLE’ MATTERS

We first have to start out by defining, ‘what is affordable housing?’ I think that each of us, every individual may have a different definition. But at the end of the day, affordable housing means to have housing that we can afford. That we can pay for, it’s nice, its quality, and we can have extra income to do other things. We’re not spending all of our money just on our home.
